Why Community Theatre

The house lights lower. Excitement builds as first time performers stand side by side with seasoned veterans waiting for their opening cue. After all the hours of rehearsal and memorizing lines, it's show time at last.

For the people involved, community theater helps build personal skills. Many of these skills are useful in other areas of life outside the theater. Skills like improved communication, critical thinking, and social skills are all key components of successful individuals.

They can be developed for free in community theater. Young actors also learn how to express themselves.

Being a part of a group, a social activity or club has been shown to improve the overall health and quality of life for so many. Community Theatre not only achieves those goals but accomplishes much more. By putting on various types of shows, the Community Theatre group provides cultural experiences for the community. Experiences that may not otherwise have been possible for the majority. The opportunity to expose people to other ways of thinking, ideas, creativity, and art through theatre, are all accomplished through the theatre experience, whether by acting, support, or audience participation, in community theatre. Join us won't you?
